"A Letter to Our Readers and Their Parents!"

IT IS OUR EARNEST HOPE THAT YOU ENJOY reading our magazines. You know, there are many different kinds of stories, and we get a different kind of satisfaction from each one. We like the stories of Robin Hood and the Iliad of Homer, because we can imagine ourselves heroes, overcoming the enemy. We like stories of great men in history, because they make us ambitious to do good, kind deeds. We like stories of mischievous boys like Tom Sawyer, because Tom does many of the things we would enjoy doing, but some of them we cannot do.

Some of you probably choose books with a lot of pictures, because the pictures seem to make the story live. That, to some extent, explains your interest in comics.

In our magazines, we try to give you good pictures and interesting stories. We would like to feel, also, that we are helping you to take a stand in favor of right and justice, develop respect for law and order, and learn to protect weaker people, just like the heroes in our adventure stories.

The grown-ups of this world owe you young people an apology, because we haven't made the world a very secure and peaceful place in which to live. Our comics portray, it is true, some of the unhappy things that happen in the world. But they are things you know about anyway—and in the stories, at least, the good people always win. All of us wish it were that way in real life as well.

Just as there are good and bad people, good and bad radio programs, good and bad movies, so there is good and bad literature. In order to help you always choose the good, we will continue to do our best to maintain a high standard in our own magazines.

Please remember that comics, with their many pictures, are just one type of literature. We also want you to grow familiar with the great books in our vast literary heritage, and we have no doubt that, with guidance from your parents, teachers, and town librarians, you will become interested in those classics, and learn to love them.

Meanwhile, don't forget, though you can get the thrill of humor and adventure in comic magazines—they should, nonetheless, be considered in two ways: Not only for the pleasure they give you, but also as a stepping-stone to your appreciation of books that have stood the test of time as reading fare for all people, young and old.

Incidentally, one of our recent editorials used the word "endorsement" in connection with Dr. Thompson's services to us as Editorial Consultant. In the interest of further clarification of Dr. Thompson's functions, we wish to state that Marvel Comic Group submits all its published magazines to Dr. Thompson for review, criticism, and report to our staff, which is under constant instruction to accept Dr. Thompson's criticisms, and to abide by the same. In this way, we constantly strive to bring better comic magazines to our vast group of readers.

A BEE IN HIS BONNET

IT was Friday after school. Tom was walking home with Diane and carrying her books. He swung them by the strap over his head. "Should be a good day for tennis tomorrow. How about it?" he asked.

Diane stopped and stared at him. "Tom, didn't you hear what Miss Blanchard said? Tomorrow is the day we go on a field trip with Professor Hopper."

"Oh that!" Tom continued to swing the books. He was unimpressed. "No one's going to catch me with a butterfly net. Uh uh! We'll play tennis tomorrow. How about it?'

"Tom, sometimes you're positively silly." She got in step again. "Professor Hopper is a great zoologist. Tomorrow we hope to find a rare lepidopteron."

It was Tom's turn to stop and stare. He dropped her books to the sidewalk. "Gosh Diane, you sound like a doctor's prescription." He continued to stare unbelievingly. "Do you actually mean you'd rather leap over the green with a butterfly net than play tennis with me?"

"Yes, and I intend to. It's exciting to catch a rare butterfly. Professor Hopper knows just where to go. He knows all their haunts."

"Humpf!" Tom swung the books again. "His name should be Professor Grasshopper. In fact he looks exactly like one when he gets into action." Tom jumped along imitating him. "Hop-hop, hop-hop! Here I come butterfly. Hop-hop, hop-hop!"

"Tom Sanders, I'll thank you for my books and I'll walk home alone."

"Aw, Diane, I didn't mean it that way. I was only kidding. Professor Hopper is in the groove, really he is. He doesn't look like a grasshopper at all."

"Never mind. You always make fun of worthwhile people and you're making fun of me, too. I never want to see you again." She grabbed her books and ran.

Tom watched her, then dug his hands into his pockets. "Golly," he said to himself. "Now I did it—but good!"

He walked home slowly, kicking everything out of his way. "Golly, now I did it," he muttered all the way home. He slumped into a chair and stared into space.

"What in the world ails you?" his mother asked. "You're usually so happy on Fridays. No school for two days, remember?"

"Not this Friday," Tom answered as he stared. "The class is going on a creepy field trip tomorrow, looking for leprechauns or something. Diane's going too."

"What's wrong with that? It wouldn't harm you one bit to learn something and the word is lepidopterons."

"Okay, but it's a silly idea anyway, leaping through the woods with butterfly nets."

"Your own father never thought it was silly. He has quite an outfit up in the attic. Your father and I went on many field trips when we were your age."

Tom sat up. "You mean Dad likes stuff like that?" He couldn't picture his he-man father with a butterfly net.

"Of course he likes it. He hasn't the time to go now."

Tom didn't hear any more. He ran to the phone and dialled Diane's number. "Hi, Diane," he said excitedly. "I'm going along tomorrow. I'll call for you. What? You mean you don't care? You don't want me along? . . . okay." Tom hung up and muttered to himself again. "She can't tell me what to do. I'm going, by gosh, and I'm going to catch the rarest bug in the woods. That's what I'll do!" He stood up and shouted.

"Mother, where did you say Dad's outfit is?"

"In the attic some place. You'll have to look around," she called.

With a few bounds, Tom was up the attic steps and standing in the center of piles of discarded articles—baby carriages, a dressmaker's model, stacks of old magazines, trunks. Tom set to work looking for his Dad's outfit. After an hour's search he found it. There were nets, boxes of mounted insects and a wierd contraption that looked like a bird cage. Tom gathered up all of it and stumbled down the stairs.

"Mother," he shouted again. "What's this fantastic thing? A gas mask?" He was holding it up when his mother entered the room.

"That is not a fantastic thing and it isn't a gas mask. Your father wore that on his head when he looked for bees. It protects a person from stings."

Gosh, it protects you all right and scares everyone else." Tom sputtered then doubled over with laughter. He was picturing himself with the bee bonnet on his head tomorrow and a butterfly net in his hand. No one would recognize him and he'd catch the rarest bug in the woods. He'd see to that all right!

Early the next morning Tom telephoned Slim, a fellow Soph, to find out where the gang was going. "Farmer Stump's woods? Good! Be seeing you," he told him, "but you won't see me." He went into gales of laughter again as he hung up.

It took him almost an hour to work out his plot. Dad's nets and mounted insects were strewn all over the floor.

"What are you up to?" his mother asked and surprised him.

Tom hid his dark deed behind his back and plopped the bee bonnet on his head. "I'm getting ready for the field trip, Mom," he said innocently.

"Well, you seem pretty busy. I hope you're not up to something. Good luck, son."

Tom took a trolley to the end of the line and got off with his bundle of stuff. At the edge of the woods, he put the weird bonnet on his head and grasped the net professionally. He saw the gang leaping and hopping around frantically. With a shout he joined them.

After fifteen minutes of leaping he called, "I've got it. I've got it! Professor—gang—Diane! Come here. I've caught it!"

Everyone turned and ran to Tom. He pretended to be busy fighting with the net. "Hurry, hurry!" he called. "It might get away."

The gang surrounded him. "Where, what, let's see it," they said excitedly. Tom motioned for quiet. He saw Diane standing a few feet away. "This is the rarest insect in the county. Don't move, anybody. I think I've got him." He pretended to be quieting the insect. Then with a dramatic gesture he opened the net. "There it is, right before your eyes!"

The professor came up and squinted at the insect. "Congratulations, young man. This day will go down in the history of zoology. You have there a rare moth that I have been seeking for years."

The gang oh'd and ah'd, then wandered away dejectedly. Each one had hoped to find a rare bug today and here this strange fellow caught one first. No one recognized him.

Tom looked around for Diane. He spotted her standing right beside him. "Hello Tom," she said stiffly.

"Oh, hello Diane," he answered with embarrassment. "How did you know it was me? How do you know I'm Tom Sanders?"

"I'd know you anywhere. May I take a look at that rare moth you just caught?"

"Sure, sure. It's exciting, isn't it?" He pushed it under her nose and waited.

Diane examined it carefully. "Tom Sanders, that moth has been dead for many many years and you know it."

"He—he's dead? Oh no, who killed my rare bug many years ago?" He pushed the weird bonnet from his face and grinned at her.

"Your own father killed it many years ago. Professor Hopper didn't notice it because he's near sighted. You cheated, Tom. You planted your father's moth in that net. I have good eyes."

"So have I, Diane," he said lamely. "I thought this would be a joke. It isn't, is it?" Tom was deflated and pushed the bonnet on his face again.

"No." She was trying hard to keep her laughter back.

"Diane, I said I have good eyes too and you look plenty good to me. I only did this to see you. Is that cheating?"

"No, Tom, that isn't cheating. How about a game of tennis right now?"

"You mean it? Let's go, Diane, let's go! Let the professor and the gang leap after bugs. We'll do some leaping with tennis rackets."

By KENT B. STILES

Uncle Sam's final three commemoratives on the 1948 thirty-stamp program were the 3-cent blue with its vignette carrying part of a monument of Abraham Lincoln and a quotation from his Gettysburg Address eighty-five years earlier; the 3-cent red for the centenary of the American Turners Society, the design including that health organizations emblem; and the 3-cent red-violet for the centenary of the birth of Joel Chandler Harris, creator of the "Uncle Remus" Negro fictional character.

Before the last of these appeared, the Post Office Department had announced a few of the stamps being planned for 1949. These include the following:

A 6-cent red airmail, to meet the increased first-class airmail rate. Design, a DC-4 plane. Date of release, Jan. 18, at Washington.

A 4-cent red airmail postal card. Design, an eagle in flight with outstretched wings. Date of release, Jan. 10, at Washington.

For the bicentenary of the founding of Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, Va. Color and design of this 3c item not immediately disclosed. Date of release, April 12, at Lexington.

A 3-cent commemorative in connection with Puerto Rico's first elected Governor taking office. Details not immediately made available.

For the centennial of Minnesota Territory. Details not immediately disclosed.

Commemorating the founding of Alexandria, Va. Details not immediately announced.

The Post Office Department is expected to issue also a stamp for the 150th anniversary of the District of Columbia.

Other special stamps likely will appear during 1949—but collectors are hopeful that the total will not reach 1948's deluge!
